WILDERNESS IS OUR COMMON GROUND

As Idahoans, we have fallen in love with the vast, enduring wilderness that surrounds us. Whether it's hiking in the Born Lakes region, watching wildlife in the big open ridge country or simply appreciating the serenity and solitude that can still be found in Idaho's backcountry, our pristine, roadless forests provide a one-of-a-kind experience for Idahoans of all ages and from all walks of life. As community members, outdoor enthusiasts, and most importantly as Idahoans, we need to work together to protect open spaces like the Boulder-White Cloud Mountains so that future generations have the chance to fall in love with the same Idaho that we have. Wilderness is about more than just protecting Idaho's wild places—it's about creating possibilities for everyone.
