

WILDERNESS IS OUR COMMON GROUND

Across the country, people from all walks of life are coming together to ensure that more of America's wild places stay wild for future generations to enjoy—for hiking, hunting, camping, climbing, paddling, picnicking, horseback riding, fishing, wildlife-watching and more. Whether it's the Tumacacori Highlands in Arizona; the Boulder-White Cloud Mountains in Idaho; New Mexico's Broad Canyon, Mount Hood in Oregon; Beauty Mountain in California; Colorado's Dominguez Canyon; or Seneca Creek in West Virginia, these amazing places enrich our lives.

Almost two and a half million acres of new wilderness have been added to the National Wilderness Preservation System in the last five years, but more needs to be done. Today, outside of Alaska, less than 3% of the country is forever protected as a natural legacy for our children and grandchildren. Wilderness is more than just open space. It's the place that opens up possibilities for everyone.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR AMERICA'S WILDERNESS CELEBRATING FIVE SUCCESSFUL YEARS PROTECTING AMERICA'S COMMON GROUND

CAMPAIGN
for AMERICA'S WILDERNESS

www.leaveitwild.org

Photos Clockwise: Jonathan Hanson, Hunter, near Tucson, AZ (C) Thomas Venables; Mike McCarthy, Orchardist, Mt. Hood, OR (C) Barbara I. Bond; Jo Cassin and Stan Kolby, Owners, Idaho River Sports, Boise, ID (C) Mark Lisk; John Vaquez, Past President, Hispano Chamber of Commerce de Las Cruces and Carolyn Kahn, President and Board Chair, High Tech Consortium of Southern New Mexico (C) Ken Stennett; Monte Matheson, Angler/Hunter, Fort Orford, OR (C) Barbara I. Bond; Keith Distel, Rancher & Teacher, Olathe, CO (C) Todd Patrick; Carol Warren, Faith Community Member, Potato Knob, WV (C) Mark Muse; Aris Miura, Student, and Joshua Baker, Instructor, Sogum Institute, Ariza, CA (C) Wendy Stephens; Bruce Phengger, Architect, Tubac, AZ (C) Thomas Venables